A TRVE RELATION
of the late proceedings of the States Armie in Flaunders, and of the late seruice done and performed by them against the Spanniardes, the two and twentieth of Iune last past. 1600.

The Tweluth of Iune last past, (after the computation of Englande) the States of the lowe Cuntries landed in Flaunders, nere to a place called Burfleete, and in nine dayes march, they came from thence to Ostende: where after the taking of certaine Stronges, the Count Maurice layde siege, to the Towne of Newport, purposing to fortifie him selfe in such sort, as not to be easily remoued: howbeit such was the great care and diligence of the Enemye to preuent them, as the Arch-Duke came himselfe in person to giue them Battaile. But the suddaine and speedie comming of the Enemye caused the States Armie (not being well settled in the Siege) to remoue thence, and to encounter the Enemye, who then marched towarde them with great furie, they being the rather incouraged thereto, by reason of an cuerthzow given to two Thowlande Scots (being the States men of warre) the same morning, which Scottes were vnder the Conduite or leading of the Count ERNESTVS, who was sent before to prevent the passage of the Enemy by the way .

After this, both the Armies being ordered placed in Battaille array, and each of them within sight of other : they paused a while who should beginne the fight, or give the first onset : at length the Enemy impatient of delays, and incouraged with the former victorie obtained against the Scots, aduanced themselves forwardes, displaide their Ensignes, and gaue the Charge : which was entertained with such resolution on the States side, as they were forced to a retreat, and were pursued till they had gayned some places of aduantage . Their Horses chardging the States men in flanche, whose secondes sayling them, they were inforced to retire : But making presently a stande, they forced the Enemy to a second Retreat, which was then so hottely followed by the States men, and with such great courage and resolution, that they had the aduantage in slaughtering and killing of the Enemy, from the Hauen of Newport, to the walles of Ostende.

In this Battaille, the Englishmen had the Vanguard, commaunded by Sir Fraunces Vere and his Brother.

The Honor of the Victorie that day, was whollie ascribed to the Englishmen.

In this fight were slaine, five English Captaines, besides other Captaines and Officers that were hurt, Sir Fraunces Vere himselfe was hurt in the Legge and Thighes, and my Lorde Gray was hurt in the face with a sword.

Of the States men (of all sortes) there were slaine, more then two thousande, and as many more soze hurt and grievously wounded .

Of the Enemies parte, it is credible reported, that there was aboute foure thousande slaine, and aboute a thousande taken prisoners, besides many that were hurt and wounded.

The Enemies Armie consisted as it was reported in seau-men

The Newes of Flaunders .

82 Eight Thousande footemen, and Seauentéene Coznets of Horsemen, and were diuided into thre Squadrons, where of the first being Spaniards, and were conducted by Danlois de Villeers, Don Iasper de Sapena, and Ieronimo denauroy .

The first two were taken Prisoners , & the thirde of them is not as yet hearde of .

The seconde Squadron were Mallons , and were conducted by one La Berlotte Don Alfonso and Bostock , þephew to sir William Stanley , whereof La Berlot and Bostock were both slaine .

The Thirde Squadron were Flemminges , and were vnder the commaunde of one Backwrie , who was also slaine at that time .

The Admirall of Aragon is taken Prisoner, and it is be- rely thought that Sir William Stanley is slaine .

The Spaniards lost their Ordnances , (being some Eight great pieces in the whole) and the Arch-Duke him- selfe lost all his own Plate and Baggage .

The fight continued from one of the Clocke in the mo- ning, till nine in the after þone of the same day .

The Spaniards lost in this seruice , aboue an hundred Ensignes , as is most certainly knowne .

The Arch-Duke himselfe fled into Bridges, and so esca- ped away very hardely, he being somewhat hurt as it is sup- posed .

The States Arruie is now before Newport, and the place as it is thought, rendred by to the States before this time .

Of the Arch-Duke ALBERTVS. and of the Duke of Anmale, there is no certaintie as yet, whether they be dead or aliue.

Whereouer, all the Ensignes and Banners that were taken from the Enemie in this seruice were brought into the Tent of his Excellencie, and his Souldiers were mightily enriched by the Spoyle.

The Arch-Duchesse her selfe trauailed with the Campe, untill she came to the Cittie of Bridges in Flaunders, where she then left them.

It is since repoized by some, that the Arch-Duke is yet liuing, and that there are come vnto him to the number of fix thousande fresh Souldiers, (taken vp in Artois, and Henault) and are vnder the conduct of the Duke of Archor.

Also it is repoized for certaintie, that there are 8000 fresh men taken out of the lande of Luick, and that they are with all speade marching to the Campe of his Excellencie, the Prince Maurice.
